RESTORED STRIKE IS BY COURTS WON BY OF N. Y. SEAMEN

Millionaire Declared a "Sane
Citizen" After a 22-Year
Legal Fight

By International News Service.
New York, July 26.—A twenty-two year legal fight which attained nationwide notoriety was ended here today when Supreme Court Justice Lord declared John Armstrong Chaloner of "Who's Looney" fame, to be a "sane citizen and a man of competence."

All of Chaloner's legal rights as a citizen of New York State were restored and he will be restored to the full management of his $2,000,000 estate.

The decision was a long one and traced the history of Chaloner's case back to 1917, when the young millionaire was first committed to the Binghamton asylum at the behest of some members of his family. He had been divorced two years prior to that time by Amelia Ryce, the novelist, who later married Prince Protobashvili.

The courts of Virginia declared Chaloner sane in 1917, following the escape from Binghamton, and he was also declared sane in 1918 by the Virginia courts. He has since lived in Virginia, where he has been married to a woman named "Who's Looney" who is now a famous actress.

Showing How Even a Shrewd Lawyer May Be Uninformed

Lawyer Stevenson has been having a good deal of fun with Henry Ford. Mr. Stevenson kept on asking Mr. Ford questions about historical events, the meaning of words, the achievements of individuals more or less known, and other things which the lawyer knew to be outside of Mr. Ford's knowledge. All this was done, of course, to make Mr. Ford look foolish and ridiculous in the eyes of the jury and of the public.

It is evident that Mr. Ford knows very little about history, literature and the excellent things we find in books. That is Mr. Ford's misfortune. But he is at least frank enough to admit it and we assume that he regrets it.

Nevertheless, we can assure Mr. Stevenson that he will never convince the American people, no matter what effect he may have upon the jury, that Henry Ford is a fool or that he bears any resemblance to a fool. We have not the slightest doubt that Mr. Ford could cross-examine Mr. Stevenson upon the interesting and useful kinetic and economic theories which Mr. Ford has so masterfully reduced to practice and make Mr. Stevenson appear as ignorant and as foolish as he has sought to make the great automobile engineer and builder appear.

Mr. Ford knows more about ONE USEFUL THING than any other living man, and that is glory enough for one lifetime; it excuses ignorance on many subjects.

We do not intend to comment on the merits of the case still on trial or on the question whether or not the Chicago Tribune libelled Mr. Ford when it called him an anarchist. But perhaps we may say a word about the definition of anarchy by the learned lawyer representing the defendant newspaper.

On Monday Mr. Stevenson spent an hour endeavoring to have Mr. Ford define anarchy and the word anarchist, and when Mr. Ford was unable to do this Mr. Stevenson then proceeded to give his own exposition and definition.

According to the erudite Mr. Stevenson an anarchist is "any one who promotes disorder or excites revolt against an established rule, law or custom."

Evidently Mr. Stevenson's conception of anarchy and of anarchists is about on a level with Mr. Ford's confessed ignorance of history and literature. Mr. Stevenson's definition of an anarchist of the world, of course, embraces George Washington, the signers of the Declaration of Independence, the French patriots who overthrew Louis XVI, the men of the Long Parliament in England, the men who fought slavery in America and every one who in any age or in any country has led a revolt against tyranny for their liberty.

We think that a diligent search through all of Mr. Ford's testimony would find no reply quite so stupid and ignorant as this definition of an anarchist advanced by Mr. Ford's legal tormentor.

It is perfectly clear that Mr. Stevenson is totally ignorant of that political and economic philosophy to which Proudhon some eighty years ago first gave the name of anarchism, though it is a philosophy which was advanced and elucidated by some of the very ablest of those splendid intellects which made ancient Athens in her prime the glory of the world.

We hasten to assure Mr. Stevenson that the philosophy of anarchism is neither based upon violence nor teaches violence, nor excites violence—that in fact all the great anarchist writers and teachers have expressly repudiated violence.

One does not necessarily have to accept the philosophy of anarchism because he understands it, but certainly every man who desires to be well informed ought at least to try to understand a philosophy before he condemns it. And most certainly a lawyer who starts out with a purpose of making a witness appear ignorant because that witness does not understand the philosophy of anarchism and the meaning of the word anarchist only makes himself ridiculous when his own questions and definitions show that he knows no more about the true meaning of those words than does a child who hasn't learned its letters.

For the benefit of Mr. Stevenson, and other persons who are prone to talk most about things they know least, we will add that the philosophy of anarchy is simply this:

Anarchy teaches that the system of grouping the peoples of the world into States is fundamentally wrong; that such States inevitably come to have conflicting interests, conflicting jealousies, conflicting ambitions, and that from these roots spring economic and military wars; that such economic and military wars necessarily result in the centralization of more and more authority in the hands of the State governments and that this in turn necessitates the surrender of more and more of the individual liberties of citizens; that these and other incidental causes have always hitherto resulted in restriction of the natural liberties of the masses in every State, and the expansion of the power of rulers; that history proves that this has been true in every State which has ever been formed, and that it is reasonable to conclude that the same phenomenon will appear in every State which may hereafter be formed and that since the system of grouping mankind into States has so often been fatal to liberty and has so invariably checked human progress and hindered human happiness by fomenting a constant anarchy of economic and military wars, the system itself must be inherently vicious and altogether wrong.

Proceeding from these plausible premises the anarchist philosophy reasons falsely to the conclusion that mankind should abolish States and should establish a universal system of small autonomous groups which would naturally federate from mere self-interest, thus eventually bringing about that system of peaceful and mutually helpful human society which Mr. Wilson, with his new version of the Holy Alliance, and Mr. Lenin, with his invention of the social pyramid, are both from opposite points of view and by different methods endeavoring to establish.

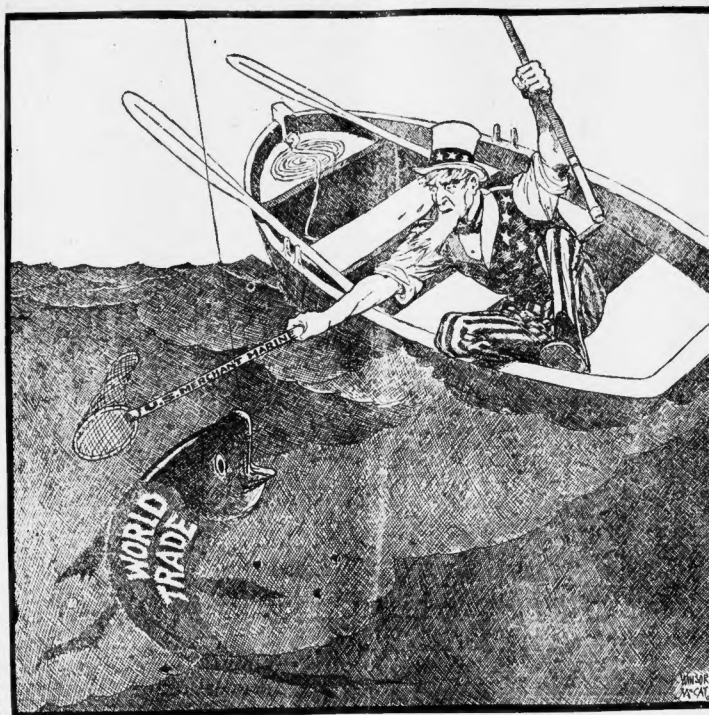

We are quite sure that if Mr. Stevenson should ever come to know what anarchism really does teach he would shudder with more fervor, though with less ignorance, than he does now. For one of the very first practical teachings of anarchism is that peoples all over the world should throw their statute books and law books on the junk pile and tell judges and lawyers to go to work at something useful if they wanted to continue to eat.

Anarchism holds that in small, autonomous groups justice would be much better administered than it is now by the simple process of letting the litigants select a jury of neighbors to hear what both sides had to say and to render a verdict in accordance with right and common sense.

And we must say that contemplation of some specimens of our present system of lawmakers, laws, courts, lawyers and judicial proceedings and decisions is quite enough to make many sensible men heartily agree with this particular plank in the platform of philosophical anarchy.

More Truth Than Poetry

THE HAPPY CLIFF DWELLERS

By ARTHUR CHAPMAN

MY heart is filled with envy of the folks who lived in cliffs; The life they led was joyous, with many bays and ifs. They built their nest-like dwellings high up on canyon walls And took their morning cocktails from sparkling waterfalls; They used no elevators—dumb waiters roused no wrath. They climbed down ropes or ladders, or trod a well-worn path; They lived on oorn and deer meat, which fare was always cheap; No six-by-eight hall bedrooms made mockery of sleep.

IN case of overcrowding another cave was sought; With long-time, costly leases no cliff dweller was caught. He located a cavern and built therein a flat, And put the sign of "Welcome" upon his yucca mat. There were no rent evictions, as furniture of stone The brainiest of movers preferred to let alone. And if the ancient landlords dared raise the rental rates, To cliff-edge they were taken and dropped upon their pates.

THERE were no agents selling the story of the war, No politics disturbed men, no car strikes made them sore; No wave of prohibition put damper on the dances, No bathing costume censors declared: "Thou shalt not glance."

In consequence of such things, and many more beside, The cliff man's lot was happy—content he lived and died. I'd live his life tomorrow, serene and poor and brown, If there these cliffs he dwelt in were not so far from town!

SUBSTANCE REQUIRED.

"An appearance of affluence is necessary to get a fast ride in London," says a correspondent. In this city more than a mere appearance of affluence is required—one must have the goods.

A GREAT DRAWBACK

Intercollegiate golf, as we take it, operates under a great handicap, inasmuch as it gives no chance at all for the cheer leader.

THE COLLECTOR'S DREAM

Two Chinese table chairs sold the other day in London. To sit in one of these chairs and put his feet on the other, while he read a few editions of Shakespeare, would be the collector's idea of heaven.

Y^e TOWNE GOSSIP

By K. C. B.

A GRUFF old man.
AND A country place.
NEAR A little town.
AND A shaded grove.
THAT THE old man owns.
AND THAT isn't fenced.
AND A path runs through.
AND ON Summer nights.
CAME VILLAGE girls.
WITH VILLAGE boys.
AND THE old man wanders through.
AND UP on the porch.
OF HIS Summer house.
THE GRUFF old man sat.
AND WATCHED them go.
AND IT'S even said.
THAT ON one June night.
WHEN THE shade was deep.
HE SAW a boy.
KISS A village girl.
AND HE yelled at them.
TO GET off his place.
AND WHETHER it's true.
OR WHETHER it's not.
THEY TOLD the tale.
WHEN THEY'D want you to know.
WHAT A terrible man.
WAS THIS gruff old man.
AND, ANYWAY.
IN THIS shaded grove.
WHERE THE lovers walked.
THE GROUND was soft.
AND THE Summer rains.
TURNED the path to mud.
AND OFTEN TIMES.
FOR DAYS at a time.
THE GRUFF old man.
WOULD SIT on his porch.
AND NEVER a boy.
AND NEVER a girl.

Look Who's Here for Erin

British War Hero Flays Chief Secretary Macpherson for Denying American Envoys' Charges of Irish Wrong in Tomorrow's Boston Sunday Advertiser

You never can tell.

Take the case of Ian Macpherson, Chief Secretary for Ireland and, by the same token, the high representative of the British Crown in the troubled political house of Erin.

Secretary Macpherson issued a sweeping denial of the charges of British wrongdoing in Ireland which were made by Messrs. Ryan, Walsh and Dunne, the American envoys. His denial was printed in full in last Sunday's Boston Advertiser, you will recall. Secretary Macpherson might look for an indignant and wrathful reply to his denial from Irish sources.

But an Englishman—mark you, an Englishman—a brave man, too, a British warrior of proven worth, soldier, scholar and writer of fame, has issued a fiery, searing, blasting reply to Secretary Macpherson.

This unexpected challenger for Erin is Lieutenant-Commander Erskine Childers, D. S. C., of the Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve. He brands the Macpherson denial as "worthless and insulting." He flays the Macpherson argument.

If the Macpherson reply was cause for discussion in Boston and New England the Childers blast is a whirlwind. Read it tomorrow in the Boston Sunday Advertiser.

Of high import, in this Irish situation, is a statement adopted by the Irish Hierarchy at a general meeting in St. Patrick's College, Maynooth, Cardinal Logue presiding. Warm thanks were extended to America, its people and its Congress. The statement adds another chapter of interest locally.

George Bernard Shaw hurls a vitriolic column or so at Gilbert K. Chesterton, the London editor. Brother Shaw is mad clear through. He shoots a barrage of criticism at Chesterton for not publishing some Shavian war articles. It is warm reading.

Read the Shavian sizzler. Then—for a cooling change—breeze through the Summer Section of tomorrow's Advertiser, with its cheerful chatter of the beach, mountain, country and shore resorts. It will keep you posted on who's who and where's where during the vacation fittings.

Permit special reference to one feature of the Summer Resort Section tomorrow. It tells the latest wrinkle in the silhouette fad. Silhouettes of society pets. That's it. Shadow pictures of bloated steeds and pedigreed pups. Smart, what!

Flying a mile high is one thing. But three miles up—that is something else again, as Abe and Mavrus said it. The aviator takes a mouthful of oxygen to keep himself from fainting.

But the engine needs a "kick," too. A Lynn man has perfected a device for feeding oxygen to aviation engines when the high altitude makes the engine faint.

Of home interest and of great value to the aviation game is this Lynn man's arrangement for giving the engine a "bracer" when high life makes it necessary.

Beginning tomorrow, a series of five articles on the heroism of American naval aviators, Admiral Sims' Eagles, as they are styled.

The first article tells how one of our aviators braved hanging as a spy in order to rescue a comrade from Austrians on the Adriatic Sea. It is a tale of a bold and daring flier, one who held no hazard too great, and whose very daring won him through.

What is the loveliest moon of all? The honeymoon. See for yourself on the cover front of the Magazine Section. It is a Stanlows picture.

Very gray was red-headed in America in those days. It was a long time ago, 20,000 years or so, according to a bizarre story in the Magazine Section. But there are those mummies—red-headed mummies—found in Utah. Science is "stumped" for once.

She had been one of England's most envied beauties. She had drunk deeply of the nectar of life. But she committed suicide. She blew out her brains—a mode of self-destruction seldom taken by women. Why? The tragic tale of Mrs. Arthur Eliot, better known as the fascinating Mrs. Atherton, fills, with illustrations, a page.

Other Magazine features include:

"Couldn't Bear to Destroy the Worn-Out Mouse."

"The Dance They Didn't Mean President Wilson Should See—He Did See It After All."

"What Happened After the Gay Victory Ball." (Another installment of the Billie Carlston Mystery.)

The bathing suit controversy has raged up and down New England beaches. Right at this time when feminine ideas clash with police rules, there comes a page—with pictures—by Lady Duff-Gordon. It is entitled, "Bathing and Beach Dresses." Every woman will wish to scan it and the men might do worse.

How you going to keep 'em from laughing to split after they've seen the comics? Give it up. Can't be done. Jiggs et al. are too funny for self-control.

Inklings and Thinklings

There's many a man who loses the combination of his safe, but none who loses the key of his club "locker."

Schourer Pinkard has sailed for the Arctic with a lot of movies for the Eskimos. It's there it won't be necessary to advertise "Twenty degrees cooler than the street."

Famous knots: Hankman's — — — huts Gordon — — — May I — — —

Complaint that burglar alarms ring too loudly. Why not install the Willard-Dempsey gang?

Prison for Profiteers—Headlines.

It's true, too; but it happened in Italy.
